Indicative of the development plan which the Central Vermont railroad has in mind for the old Granite City Driving park in the south end is a blueprint of the plot which was recently turned over to the secretary of the Granite Manufacturers' association. Since it became evident that the park is not to be used as a terminus for the projected air line to the quarries, the Central Vermont officials have considered plans for developing stoned sites within the boarded enclosure long used for recreation purposes. In detail, the railroad engineers have worked out a plan for locating twenty manufacturing plants in the park. Care has been taken to provide ample transportation facilities for each prospective shed and all railroad sidings are included in the blueprint.
